

VOLUNTEER in Latin America

Outreach360 is committed to building the futures of disadvantaged children living in impoverished areas of Latin America through creative and meaningful education. At our Learning Centers we shift perspective beyond traditional academics and open up a world with endless possibilities that create opportunities for the children we serve to transform their own lives.

As a High School Team volunteering in Nicaragua or the Dominican Republic, you will play an important role teaching English or Spanish Literacy to elementary school students in Outreach360 programs. Through the distinct challenges and adventures of working in a developing country, high school students experience unique personal growth as they work together in teams learning how to communicate effectively to find innovative teaching solutions for children from under-developed education systems.

High School Teams also broaden their cultural understanding through activities and excursions organized by Outreach360. Whether observing international relations at a Haitian market on the Dominican border, or learning about organic coffee farming in the mountains of Nicaragua, cultural activities are an invaluable part of the Outreach360 experience. Together, authentic service and cultural exchange provide a powerful experience for young adults that opens their eyes to the world around them, and shapes a global view informed by personal experience.

“This was an unforgettable experience, far outdoing the typical museum and shopping trips to Spain or the build-a-sidewalk in Costa Rica types of programs high school groups so frequently participate in.”

Outreach360 programs are about much more than the power of education or the wonder of experiencing another culture. They are about transforming lives. As high school students work to transform the lives of the children we serve, they will discover that in the process their
